

Brent Weil

President, Strategic Workforce Partners

Brent Weil brings more than 20 years of experience in workforce development, staffing, public-private partnerships, and education and training solutions. As President of Strategic Workforce Partners, he spearheads national and regional campaigns, employer and member engagement, asset mapping, career pathways, training solutions, economic development, and coalition-building to achieve sustainable workforce solutions.

A former manager of national partnerships for the U.S. Department of Labor, Brent has had senior leadership positions responsible for national workforce development solutions at the Wireless Infrastructure Association, Argentum, and the Manufacturing Institute at the National Association of Manufacturers. He also served as vice president of staffing and mid-Atlantic operations for PrimeFlight Aviation Services. Brent has raised more than $21 million in federal, state, and foundation grants and contracts to build innovative, impactful, and sustainable workforce development initiatives, and he created and managed registered apprenticeship programs that have resulted in more than 8,000 apprentices across more than 80 employers. He also managed and expanded the Manufacturing Institute's Skills Certification System, mapping 17 industry certifications to industry occupations for the benefit of employers, educators, and workforce agencies.

A former public school teacher, Brent earned a bachelor's degree in political science at Stanford University and a master's of education at George Washington University.